As is shown in the two photos, one man has written "Beckham" on his face and the other is squandering RMB 300 on Beckham's hairstyle. How mad their behaviors are!

The photos have revealed a current social phenomenon that some young people are crazily following superstars. These over-ardent admirers devote almost all the time and energy to the pursuit of stars. Rationally speaking, their admiration is superficial and short-sighted because their attention is mainly concentrated on the physical appearance rather than the soul force of the stars. Few of the youngsters can realize the achievements the superstars have attained are from their diligence and perseverance.

In my opinion, though the appreciation of idols itself gives little cause for criticism, the young should admire and imitate their idols in a proper way. It is not worthwhile for the young people to hurt themselves or spend extravagantly for the purpose of imitating idols. Idol worship is not necessarily bad and real heroes can inspire the young generation to bravely pursue better life and brighter future. To have a good result, the society should encourage the young people to focus their attention on good qualities which help the stars succeed and the young people themselves should learn how to work hard to earn their own honor like their idols.
